MONDAY NOVEMBER 19, 1877

PETERSBURG, VA., November 16, 1877. Editors Dispatch: The poem in to-day's Dispatch, "From Songs of Three Centuries, author unknown." was the last song of Barry Cornwall. The first line in each verse of your rendition differs from that in the original, which read, "When the grass grows over me," &c.

We return thanks to our correspondent. Can he tell us who wrote the poem beginning, "My heart aches sore for thee, to-night, beloved," &c., which appeared in last Tuesday's issue of the Dispatch?

[For the Dispatch.] The "Old Swan," Again .-- Another Auecdote.

To your amusing anecdote touching the grand opening of the "Old Swan" "without money and without credit," I propose to add the "finale." Stebbins & Pullen, well-known china merchants, doing business opposite the "Swan," naturally desirous of seeing a first-class hotel established in that part of had 'gone up,'" and rapidly passed on. Now, I hope and believe that Major Johnston's effort to build the Clifton Forge road " without money and without credit" will have a very different termination from the experiment made at the "Old Swan." HANOVER.

[For the Dispatch.] Missionary Work.

Mrs. Comstock says missionary work for the mothers of Richmond lies at their very door if they will only see it, only in another form-trying to reform the colored women of the city. But how to begin? Many white families rent their kitchenrooms and give up their yards to colored people. They should see that none but lawfully-married people occupied them. What can teachers in schools do with children brought up where evil is practiced, and what can their clergymen do unless the white people lend a hand in teaching them to obey the commandments? Now, if every white family would make it their business to try and elevate the moral tone of the negro women it would work to their own advantage, as they would be more conscientious in the discharge of their duties to them. Another matter: Each employer should pay promptly, whether wages, washing, or sewing. As they have nothing but their labor to depend on, how can they be honest, with the little light they have and many mouths to feed, unless they are paid what they work for?

I bear a great deal about the failings of the colored people. We must be just. Do we do our duty to them? If not, it is high time we set about it, and in this home missionary work it is very simple, and, as I said before, at our very door. RICHMOND, November 16, 1877.

THE INFINITIVE Mood.—The preposition finitive mood. There are certain cases where it may be omitted, but it is a settled rule of grammar that whenever the sign to is used it must not be separated from the rest of the infinitive by an adverb. "Instead of 'To faithfully represent this scene would be impossible,' say faithfully to represent this scene faiths."

CITY OF RICHMOND AT AUCTION.—In execution of a decree of the Chancery Court of the city of Richmond entered on the 25th day of October. 1677, in the consolidated cases of Mitchell's execution vs. Mitchell et als. and H. Y. Mitchell vs. same, the undersigned, the special commissioner thereby appointed, will sell by auction, upon the premises respectively, in the order and at the times named below, the following VALUABLE REAL ESTATE. of which the late William Mitchell, Jr., died seized—to-wit: to attached to a verb is the sign of the inimpossible, say 'faithfully to represent this scene,' or to 'represent this scene faithfully.'"—Quackenbos, § 645. In "Vulgarisms Exposed," page 145, is the rule: "The to of the infinitive mood is inseparable from the verb," and the author goes on to quote the most common violations of this simple law, such as "To boldly resist, To seriously injure, To legally acknowledge, To simply state, To deeply 196-197. boldly resist, To seriously injure, To legally acknowledge, To simply state, To deeply realize, To still exhibit, To rapidly recruit, To gradually change, To not only ruin," &c. We regret to say that this vulgarism is very common, in spite of the grammarians. The late President Lincoln introduced it many times into nearly or quite all of his messages and public documents. It may be forgiven as a slip of the tongue, but there is no excuse for it in a State paper which must have passed under revision bewhich must have passed under revision before publication, and where its presence shows most culpable carclessness, or an ab-solute want of scholarly culture, on the part of the writer.

A Worcester paper designs a sharp bit at Secretary Evarts in its assertion that he could have had no hand in the President's thanksgiving proclamation. In our judgment, even the long and involved periods attributed to Mr. Evarts would provoke far less criticism in educated circles than the expression "to devoutly beseech" which is to be found in its closing recommenda-

A score of bills have just been laid be-fore Congress entitled "To further provide" for the several objects to which they refer; and our public documents are filled with illustrations of these gross violations of grammatical propriety.

We fear that these will serve "to greatly strengthen" the bad habit, until "to commonly use" these vulgar expressions will be the rule, and "to carefully avoid" them the exception. If our brethren of the press will unite "to strenuously rest" the licen-tious speech and "to persisently oppose its further growth, they will deserve the thanks of all who love the pure English tongue.

The quoted specimens of the error in the above sentences are taken at random from a few brought to our table from the last mail .- New York Journal of Commerce.

AN AMERICAN IN DISTRESS .- One rarely sees a fellow-countryman in distress in Paris, but I did meet one day before yesterday. He came up to me on the Rue Scribe, where if you are not an American you are supposed to be, as nearly every office on it is in some way connected with Yankee trade, and, observing me sharply, he said: "Are you an American?"

I proudly acknowledged that I was a citizen of the Republic.
"Wal," he sald, "can you tell me where

I can get some chewin' tobacco?" I said no, of course; no one chews in France-didn't know personally any American resident who "chawed." "Wal," he said sadly, "it's all very well for them that don't chew; but I've got to have some; can't live without it." And he stepped out with a determined air, looking for another American to whom he could put his despairing question .- Edward King

Everybody who has visited San Francisco knows Woodward's Gardens, with its fine collections of animals, birds, etc. The proprietor is famous for catching at every rarity that comes in his way, and it was with emotions of intense delight that he recently received a note from a friend just returned from the East, stating that he had brought with him for the Gardens "a fine specimen of ground-hog." An expressman was sent for the animal, who returned with a large box. A company of scientific men assembled in the proprietor's room to view the prodigy; the lid of the box was carefully raised, and there was disclosed to yiew-a

The perversion of transpire came about in this way: One writer would say that a certain event "transpired yesterday," meaning very properly that it was revealed yesterday—"came out," "was breathed forth"-although it might have really happened last year. An imitator seized the word as describing something which actually occurred yesterday, and thus to "transpire" has come to mean the same as "to happen."-New York Journal of Com-

The Castle by the Sea. [Translated from the German of Uhland by Miss N. W. T.]

That eastle by the sea? Holden and rosy float the clouds Over it constantly.

Hast thou seen that high old castle.

So doen it rests, it seems to bow
To itself in the crystal tide.
So high it mounts in the evening clouds
A flame its turrets hide.

Aht well indeed have I seen it,
That eastle by the sea.
With the moon overhead, and the rising must

Did the wind and the moving waters Give out a merry song? Did'et thou hear orchestral music And singing the halls among? The winds and the waves lay resting

In deep tranquility:
A plaintive song the halfs among
I listened to tearfully. Did'st thou see above thee walking
The king and his fair queen,
Did'st thou see the red mantle waying,
And the crown with golden sheen?

Dad they not fead with capture X beautiful maiden there, As radiant as the sunshine, This maiden with golden bair?

I saw the parents walking, With heads uncrowned and bare, And mourning garments clothed them; The maiden I saw not there.

Seldom is it that such valuable property as this is offered for sale in the city of Manchester. Situated on one of our most popular streets, and near the corner of Twelfth street (or Free-Bridge avenue), which is now being graced and paved, it should attract the attention of all parties seeking residences in a first-class neighborhood, or those who are looking for safe and permanent investments for their capital. Manchester is improving daily, and when her many advantages are considered capitalists should look well to their interest, and not let such chances for investment as this offers go unnoticed.
